

To Whom It May Concern:

Writing a letter of recommendation for Chad Murphy Price is a delightful task. As a professional teacher educator, and public speaker myself, I know a good speaker when I hear one and Chad is certainly exemplary!

I have asked Chad to present to the students in various courses that I teach at UW Milwaukee and everyone benefits. Chad last spoke to a class of approximately 100 undergraduate students on the importance of self-determination, social relationships and how we can all work together to make dreams come true—for students with disabilities along with everyone else. Chad's engaging style had the students' attention, they listened for the entire hour and I know they were impressed because they quoted Chad in their final exams. Please read the comments from two students:

As the presenter Chad Murphy-Price taught us all that self-advocacy is just as important as having strong advocates. Learning what resources are out there and helping them get what they need, and how to speak for themselves are all very important self-advocating skills.

"It's about time for society to start focusing on people's abilities rather than their disabilities." Chad Murphy-Price

In short, Chad is skilled, motivating and informative. His manner of speaking and sharing from the many wonderful stories that highlight his life's journey touch everyone. If you are able to secure Chad Murphy-Price as a speaker, you and members of your organization will agree that this young man's message is an important one.

Sincerely,

Maureen W. Keyes, Ph. D.

Associate Professor Department of Exceptional Education

University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee